Not illustrated. 1902 Excerpt: . . . in wood and such carpentry work as teachers often demand. These boys with the vice-rincipal and myself have worked afternoons, at night, on Saturdays and on holidays. Some teachers object to this, and it would not be a good thing for the practice to become widespread on account of the personal expense entailed. But the work undertaken was difficult and the boys engaged are all of the higher grades. And then it is our motto that more people die from over-sleep than from over-work. A manual training center is not considered complete unless in addition to a wood-working shop for boys it contains a room properly equipped for the teaching of household arts to girls. One such center is in operation at Hopkins avenue and Federal street. In it 204 girls of the 8th grades of Groups E, F, I, H, and J receive weekly instruction....
