From this time forth stern duty requires us to stay at home ami deal only in American productions. In this little private exposition as many foreign countries have been represented as small expositions generally can boast of. The space allott d Great Britain was necessarily the largest, but France was not far behind, albeit very few French flags were set to mark thenationa ity of the goods. One country is entire y unrepresented, that is Central Africa; yet it is not the f u t of the culinary commissioners, but of the country itself. A careful examination of the books of Stanley s explorations ends fruitlessly. It appears painly that the interior of Africa, or the African s interior--and if there is any difference in the terms whichever is right wi l do--is altogether unacquainted with...
